Course Number HST-225-01 Course Description This course aims to give students the knowledge and the tools to think critically about how history has shaped the present state of the earth and human relationships with it. It focuses on the history of man's interaction with nature on the North American continent, with a particular focus on the area that would become the United States, from precolonial times until the present. Academic Term 22/FA Instructor Morris, Andrew Location & Meeting Time M/W 03:05PM-04:45PM LEC Credits 1.00 Capacity 25 Total Students 0 Additional Information http://www.union.edu/History Common Curriculum SOCS Social Science Interdisciplinary Programs American Studies Environmental Science & Policy Academic Department History Field Of Study History (HST)