

Course Number

HST-229-01

Course Description

The Adirondack region of northern New York State has been a proving ground for shifting American attitudes toward the environment, from early colonial (ears of wilderness, to intensive resource exploitation, and to efforts to conserve natural resources and preserve distinctive wilderness areas. This course will examine Adirondack environmental history and place it in the context of broader American environmental history. It will leverage Union College's proximity to the region, and the resources of the Union College Kelly Adirondack Center, to offer students both intellectual and experiential engagement with the history of this distinctive place.

Academic Term

22/FA

Instructor

Morris, Andrew

Location & Meeting Time

Kelly Adirondack Center-116 M/W 03:05PM-04:45PM LEC

Credits

1.00

Capacity

15

Total Students

10

Additional Information

<http://www.union.edu/History>

Common Curriculum

SOCS

Interdisciplinary Programs

Environmental Science & Policy

American Studies

Academic Department

History

Field Of Study

History (HST)